The Creeps Coming For Your Children And Grandchildren IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND LIBRARIES

CHRISTIAN ACTION NETWORK

FEBRUARY 2019

Parents across the United States are expressing outrage over a new public library program to convince children to become drag queens, homosexuals or transgenders.

The program, happening in libraries in dozens of small towns and big cities, is called "Drag Queen Story Hour."

It involves men dressing up as women and reading gender-fluid or transsexual bedtime stories to children ages 3-6, though children of all ages have been encouraged to attend.

The American Library Association, along with gay activist groups, is promoting the event. Organizers claim the program offers "a more equitable, diverse, and inclusive society."

But many opposition parents describe the Drag Queen Story Hour performance as deviant and reprehensible behavior.

Martin Mawyer, president of Christian Action Network, said, "The sole purpose of these Drag Queen performances is to convince little boys to become girls. It's to rob them of their masculinity, strip them of their biological gender and deprive them of their God-given maleness."

“This perverted program borders on child sex abuse and mental rape of a minor,” Mawyer said.

Michelle Tea started Drag Queen Story Hour (DQSH) in December 2015.

From its original chapter in San Francisco, DQSH has grown to 40 chapters nationwide, with drag queen library performances occurring in such predictable cities as New York and L.A. and surprisingly conservative cities as Lafayette, Louisiana and Mobile, Alabama.

throughout the nation, aided with the help of the American Library Association.

DQSH has been so successful hosting public library events, organizers have now launched a website to promote it in the public schools.

“It’s growing all over the nation, including the South,” said one organizer of the events, Jonathan Hamlit, a New Yorker.

Another DQSH organizer also admitted that the goal of the performances is to “groom” boys into girls.

“This is going to be the grooming of the next generation. We are trying to groom the next generation,” Dylan Pontiff told the Lafayette City-Parish Council in Louisiana.

DQSH organizers, the American Library Association and many media members defend the shows as teaching children acceptance, love, tolerance, inclusiveness, anti-bullying and suicide prevention.

“Whenever liberals want to push their perversion on others, they vomit out words like love, diversity and acceptance,” Mawyer said, “as if this somehow makes a parent feel better when a bearded man, dressed in woman clothing, is attempting to ‘groom’ their boy into a girl.”

NBC boasted in one of its headlines, “Drag Queen Story Hour brings pride and glamor to libraries across the U.S.”

“Wrong,” said Martin Mawyer about the NBC headline. “Drag Queen Story Hour is about bringing tortured and depraved souls to libraries whose only goal is sexually corrupt little children. It’s tax-payer funded child molesting.”

During DQSH performances, children are asked such questions as, “Are you a boy or a girl?” and “Who wants to be a drag queen when you grow up?”

One popular book read to the children is “A Day in the Life of Marlon Bundo”.

The fictional, illustrated story depicts Vice President Mike Pence as a grumpy stinkbug who wants to stop the marriage between two homosexual rabbits.

Two lawsuits have been filed to stop DQSH events at local libraries, but federal judges in both cases ruled in favor of allowing the events to proceed.

Linda Rodriguez, who brought a lawsuit in Houston, TX, said, “Children are great imitators. Let’s give them something great to imitate like moral and ethical values, not drag queen lifestyles.”

In Evansville, IN a library-hosted drag queen event was strongly opposed by Justin Elpers, a Fifth Ward councilman.

“This is reprehensible,” he said. “The target age is up to 11 years old. As an educator and a parent, I’m in shock.”

Jim Love, an Evansville resident, added, “I have seven and nine-year old sons, and I sure don’t want them exposed to deviant behavior authorized by a public library. If the public library puts on this drag queen show, the library card at my house is gone.”

Throughout the nation, many of the library-hosted DQSH events have been met with angry protesters, with parents displaying such signs as “CHILD ABUSE” and “This library perverts children.”

Franklin Graham applauded the parental pushback against the library events.

“Men in full drag reading books to kids at the public library? No wonder people are protesting!” Graham wrote in a Facebook post.

The official website of Drag Queen Story Hour says the goal of the performances is to help children “defy rigid gender restrictions” and accept drag queens as “glamorous, positive, and unabashedly queer role models.”

“It encourages children to look beyond gender stereotypes and embrace unfettered exploration of self,” the website claims.

Martin Mawyer criticized the website.

“Asking a two-year old boy to explore himself to see if he’s happy with his genitals is disgusting. If this was being done on a public street, the drag queen would be arrested,” Mawyer said

Mawyer said Christian Action Network is launching an aggressive media and activist campaign to alert parents about Drag Queen Story Hour occurring in public libraries as well as putting pressure on the American Library Association to stop promoting the events.

“Let’s be clear,” Mawyer said. “These library-hosted events border on the promotion of male genocide and pedophilia. They do not deserve a dime of public funding, and we’re going to see what we can do to defund these events.”

CAN will be producing and distributing a newsletter exposé on Drag Queen Story Hour, as well as releasing a fact-finding documentary that lifts the veil on the shocking Drag Queens that are exposing children to perversion.
